Electronic Locks

Electronic lock types defined

Most electronic locks are battery powered making battery life a key design challenge. Low power DC/DC with nano-amp quiescent current, load switches and an ultra-low-power microcontroller make extremely long battery life possible. Electronic smart locks are also incorporating more interactive RGBW LCD, capacitive touch and audio feedback to enable more intuitive and aesthetically pleasing devices while maintaining minimal power consumption. In residential homes, Bluetooth® low energy is often used for smart electronic lock designs.
